Sales countdown timer. Letting customers know they don't have much time to wait or think!

Trying to add more interaction in the main web page to catch customers' eyes. But in the mobile I only design in a simple way, which can let customers use on their phone easily.

60% of our customer are women with kids.

One of the specialty of Uniqlo is that it creates its own branded and copyrighted fabrics. So I want to put this information in the main page.

Outfit recommendation makes customers want to buy more than they expect, since buying other relative products can help them save time to think how to dress up.

Rather than putting all the information down to the end of the page, using tabs can help users to find information they need easily.

D design - Sign In

Tab size are different bewteen log in and sign up, since people only use sign up one time when the first time they register

When designing wireframe I put Facebook and Google login button under the normal login in button. It doesn't feel any wrong, but after I start to add colors, these three button let me feel confused at the first sight. So in the prototype I changed it to two parts.
